The surf recedes, the waters roll back, and I find myself in a new world. Last night there was a full moon, and now the sea is so low that for several hours around the turning of the ebb tide the white beach of Shark Cove sports a black weedy fringe at the water's edge, and a wide bar briefly connects South Beach with Marsh Island--as, I suppose, the water of the Red Sea parted before Moses. Since the tides are the ocean's response to the pull of the moon and the sun, the height of the tide varies as the moon waxes and wanes. And just as the moon rises later each night, so the high tides are correspondingly later. Twice each lunar month, at the new moon and the full moon, the high flood tides are at their highest and the low ebb tides at their lowest; in the months around the solstices, when moon and sun are lined up with Earth so as to exert their maximum gravitational pull, the high tides rise so high on the beach that the neck of the nubble all but disappears underwater, leaving this spit of land an island off an island, and the ebb tides recede so far from shore that I can walk all the way to Marsh Island and back on the rocky bar without getting caught by the returning tide. Now seaweeds and shellfish undreamed of by the occasional bather or boater sailing above are briefly exposed: purple sea urchins with their delicate yellow roe, great pink starfish, the rare spiraled moon shell, enormous crabs and mussels, even young lobsters that once I actually caught with my bare hands.

"The shore has a dual nature, changing with the swing of the tides, belonging now to the land, now to the sea. . . . Only the most hardy and adaptable can survive in a region so mutable," writes Rachel Carson in The Edge of the Sea. It seems that I, inflexible urbanite, have joined the hardy and adaptable.

Questions 26-30

The study of history is more than the objective listing of facts. The point of view of the historian colors and informs our interpretation of events. Historians are not generally interested in what events happened, but in why they happened, and what their occurrences imply. With this in mind, we must recognize that our perception of historical events is largely influenced by existing political and social climates. This fact is perhaps most noticeable in the various historical "revisionist" movements which swept colleges and universities during the 20th century. The first of these concerned the origins the First World War. Though the Treaty of Versailles implicated Germany and her allies as the instigators of the conflicts, historians in the twenties began to question the validity of this placement of blame. The specific scholarly issues are not of great importance; more consequential is the fact that America was entering a worldwide depression. Thus, discontentment with current social conditions was redirected at past decisions. This movement gained such popularity that by the late 1930s, a vast majority of Americans felt that it was wrong for the United States to have entered the war. A similar movement “revised” the origins of the Cold War during the 1960s. Because Americans were upset over the Vietnam War, they began to look to the past for their ills, blaming the United States for instigating the Cold War.

26. What is the author’s main purpose in the passage?
(A) to describe various historical “revisionist” movements in the 20th century
(B) to offer insight into the nature of historical study
(C) to describe the proper role of historian
(D) to question standard beliefs about the origins of the First World War
27. The word “climates” would be best replaced by which of the following?
   (A) conditions
   (B) systems
   (C) passions
   (D) temperatures

28. According to the passage, what did the Treaty of Versailles claim?
   (A) The United States had instigated the Cold War.
   (B) It was important to understand the origin of the First World War.
   (C) Germany should no longer be treated as an alley.
   (D) Germany was responsible for World War I.

29. According to the passage, the main reason for revisionist movements is
   (A) the discovery of new information concerning historical events
   (B) conflict between historians of different nationalities
   (C) discontentment with existing situations
   (D) the concern of historians with the causes and consequences of events

30. Which is not true according to the passage?
   (A) The “revisionist” movement gained a lot of popularity by the late 1930s.
   (B) The first revisionist movement concerned the origin of World War I.
   (C) Our perception of historical events is largely affected by the existing political and social climates.
   (D) The study of history is merely the objective listing of facts.
